Editorial Review

From Publishers Weekly

Meegan walked 19,019 miles over seven years--from the southernmost tip of South America to the Arctic Ocean at Prudhoe Bay, Alaska. "The account of his walk through South and Central America is first-rate adventure, with physical dangers and obstacles surmounted. From Texas to New York and across Canada is a weary trudge, and the final push proves to be anticlimactic," noted PW.

From Library Journal

Accounts of walking tours are worth reading when they are well-written and the author has a perspective and personality worth sharing. It has remarkably little to do with the challenge of the trek itself: Colin Fletcher could make any stroll fascinating. Hanuse was 53 when she walked across the country (her husband accompanied her with a well-equipped RV). Her book is cluttered with diversions of her dog's antics along the way. Outside of admiring her pluck, there is little here for the reader. Meegan, a young Englishman, walked 19,000 miles from the tip of South America to the top of Alaska. Yet that isn't what makes his a better book. Instead it is Meegan's engaging style, his lack of braggadocio, and his amazing capacity to shrug off unpleasantness that makes his book enjoyable to read. It is of little consequence that this is the longest recorded journey. His trip took seven years, with several interruptions, during which he managed to start a family. Recommended for public libraries. Harold M. Otness, Southern Oregon State Coll. Lib., Ashland
